2014 International Conference on Health Promoting School

(2014.10.13update)

- Organizer : Health Promotion Administration, Ministry of Health and Welfare, Taiwan/ASCD ( Association for Supervision & Curriculum Development ) / ISHN ( International School Health Network ) /SHE(School for Health in Europe)/ Asia Cross-Sector Network/Exchange on School Health & Development
- Date : November 14th-15th, 2014
- Venue : Evergreen International Convention Center
- Main Theme :
Assessments, Accomplishments, Anniversaries and Action: Knowing Where we are At, to focus on Where we are Going in School Health, Development and Education
- Abstract :
The school health movement emerged in many countries around the world in the late 1980's, with many countries formalizing their multi-intervention approaches and programs in the years that immediately followed. Two and half decades later, many countries are moving forward while some are re-assessing their approach. Remarkable progress has been made, despite the absence of high level policy commitments in many jurisdictions. Education and schooling has re-emerged as a vital focus, as a backbone to most health, development and social programs while educational authorities are debating, once again, the basic goals/structures of schooling. The economic downturn in several jurisdictions are putting immense pressure on public health systems, particularly the health promotion programs that are vital to long-term health but that often do not fare well in crisis management thinking.

In this important time of reflection and decision-making, it is vital that school health and development programs benefit from appropriate and long-term assessments. This conference will examine such valid and comprehensive systems for monitoring and reporting progress. Current and innovative tools and better practices in monitoring, reporting assessment will be examined. (ISHN has a discussion group that can lead this) Before and after the event, participants will have the opportunity to discuss these better practices and to share country and state level information in useful, comparable and realistic ways. (ISHN has a database of national, state reports and contacts that could be built up and shared for the event.)

Sometimes, in the face of adversity or daily business, we forget to honour our accomplishments and celebrate our important anniversaries. Taiwan, the host of this event, will be celebrating its 18th year of its excellent, national program but we all have much to celebrate. In addition to the human and health promoting elements of that celebration, this conference will examine the very real, very significant cost benefits of working within a long term, coordinated plan.

Actions are always called for after most assessments and anniversaries. But this event will identify and discuss actions of a slightly different sort. We will articulate new pathways that follow at least two important new directions in school-based and school-linked health and social development. The first is to ensure that these actions are embedded deeply within the core mandates and priorities of education systems. The second is that we will start with the ends more firmly in mind, by re-ordering our thinking to identify the system and organizational capacities required to sustain multi-intervention approaches and programs in the long term, on how we need to influence or support systems change, on how we need to build scaffolds and other incremental supports into more carefully structured implementation and maintenance planning.
